Summary Paragraph

This amendment to the “Edgewood Historic District – Taft Estate Plat” extends the eastern boundary of the existing district across Narragansett Boulevard to the Providence River (upper Narragansett Bay), adding a 21,670 sq.ft. parcel of waterfront open space to the historic district. This parcel is part of a character-defining topographical feature in the Taft Estate Plat: Stillhouse Cove, which influenced the distinctive curvature of Narragansett Boulevard through the plat as well as the arrangement of house lots, all of which are west of Narragansett Boulevard with many having scenic views from the bluffs overlooking the cove. In 1915-1916 this natural open space became part of the Stillhouse Cove Reservation in the metropolitan park system, and it remains a public park today, now owned by the City of Cranston. The nominated parcel is the southernmost of two parcels that comprise this park.

Narrative Description

Inventory

Contributing elements within the Edgewood Historic District – Taft Estate Plat are defined as those sites, buildings, structures, and objects that relate visually and historically to the district’s areas of significance between ca. 1850 and 1941, the period in which both the Taft Estate Plat and the larger Edgewood neighborhood substantially achieved their present form.

Note: While only one of the two parcels in the Stillhouse Cove Reservation is the subject of the Amendment, both parcels together along with the adjacent section of Narragansett Boulevard present a unified landscape. This narrative describes that landscape as a whole, noting individual features that are specific to the nominated southern parcel. The northern parcel is anticipated to be nominated to the National Register as part of the Aberdeen Plat Historic District.

NARRAGANSETT BOULEVARD - STILLHOUSE COVE RESERVATION (SOUTHERN PARCEL)

The Stillhouse Cove Reservation lies on the east side of Narragansett Boulevard, bounded by Strathmore Place on the north and Ocean Avenue on the south. It is approximately 1,500 feet long, with a concave-curved shoreline. The cove lands are broadest at the northern end of the cove, about 365 feet wide abutting Strathmore Place, and gradually taper down to a narrow strip about 30 to 60 feet wide near Ocean Avenue.¹ The land is mostly level adjacent to Narragansett Boulevard, and then slopes down toward the water.

The southern parcel of the Reservation occupies approximately half of its length, from roughly opposite Windsor Road to Ocean Avenue, and is about 100 feet wide at its widest point, where it abuts the northern parcel.

Stillhouse Cove is an intertidal zone, so the land area of the Reservation has historically consisted mostly of salt marsh and beach. The general contours of the shoreline have remained much the same, and while the landscape features have changed somewhat due to a combination of weather, plant life cycles, erosion, and other maintenance issues, the cove lands today are still consistent with their early 20th century appearance, as seen in historic photos (Figures 1 and 2).

In 2004, the City of Cranston (with multiple other stakeholders) began a restoration of the Stillhouse Cove Reservation that was continued in 2007 by the Edgewood Waterfront Preservation Association. The natural salt marsh was restored, and invasive vegetation was removed. Erosion control measures, including 850 linear feet of rip-rap wall and a new storm-water drainage system, were installed. Public access was also improved: a new concrete sidewalk with granite curbs was built along the street edge, and an area of green lawn, with scattered trees and park benches, was installed next to that sidewalk to protect the marsh and the beach.² In the southern parcel of the Reservation, a boat ramp opposite Circuit Drive (built sometime after 1962) is scheduled for replacement (in pre-cast concrete) by 2015.

While most of Narragansett Boulevard runs straight along the top of a line of 30-foot bluffs overlooking the Providence River, the last 0.3 mile section of road, from Sefton Drive southward to Ocean Avenue, slopes down in front of the bluffs to sea level and curves around Stillhouse Cove. This change in grade and curvature, along with the sweeping and unobstructed waterfront views that open up on the roadway's east side as it descends to Stillhouse Cove, are unique and character-defining features of the southern end of Narragansett Boulevard. Although the 1904 Taft Estate Plat map shows Narragansett Boulevard as being 80 feet wide (which is the consistent width of its right-of-way for its entire 1.3 mile length), the section that curves around Stillhouse Cove was originally built as a single-lane road (Figures 1 and 2). It was widened in the 1940s as part of a sewer improvement project, which required some filling of the cove lands near Ocean Avenue.³

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph (Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

Waterfront open space has been an important visual characteristic of the Taft Estate since 1860, when Orray Taft purchased the 35-acre Brattle Farm in Edgewood as his rural retreat, and built his country home on the bluffs overlooking Stillhouse Cove. When the estate was platted for residential development in 1904, the house lots were all laid out on the west side of Narragansett Boulevard, leaving the cove lands to the east as natural open space, in keeping with the garden suburb precept of utilizing topographic features to provide scenic views. This not only enhanced the plat's marketability and rapid pace of development, but also set the stage for the Stillhouse Cove Reservation to be incorporated into the State of Rhode Island's metropolitan park system in 1915, highlighting its significance both to the plat and the larger Edgewood neighborhood. The portion of the Stillhouse Cove Reservation that was included in the original plat meets Criterion A for National Register listing for its associations with community planning, and still maintains integrity of location, setting, materials, feeling, and association. It contributes to the overall significance of the historic district at the local level.

Narrative Statement of Significance (Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

The history of the Taft Estate, within the context of Edgewood's development as a suburban residential neighborhood, is explained in the National Register nomination for the "Edgewood Historic District – Taft Estate Plat." This narrative expands briefly on the importance of Stillhouse Cove and Narragansett Boulevard to the development of the plat.

By the end of the 19th century, the Taft estate was bounded by what is now Massasoit Avenue on the north, Broad Street on the west, Ocean Avenue on the south, and the Providence River on the east. In 1896, Edward P. Taft deeded to the Town of Cranston, "for highway purposes," a strip of land running along the entire east side of his estate, 80 feet wide by about half a mile long, which curved at its southern end around the shoreline of Stillhouse Cove.⁴ This may have been the first stretch of right-of-way acquired by the Town for the construction of Narragansett Boulevard (completed in 1906).

A year later, apparently anticipating an increased demand for new suburban housing in Edgewood, especially once Narragansett Boulevard was completed, Edward P. Taft began to subdivide his property for residential development. He started at the northern end of the estate (furthest away from his own home) with a plat depicting house lots on Massasoit Avenue and "Canonicus Avenue" (now Sefton Drive), recorded in 1897.⁵

After Taft died in 1899, the estate was essentially split in half, with each half subsequently sold to other owners and then platted multiple times. As a result, the cove lands, which had originally been a unified landscape when part of the Taft Estate, were likewise subdivided into two parcels. The northern portion of the Taft Estate, including about half of Stillhouse Cove, eventually became the Aberdeen Plat of 1901 (anticipated to be nominated to the National Register as a historic district).

When Stephen B. Brown purchased the southern half of the estate in July 1904, and a month later recorded the Taft Estate Plat, the natural topography of the land clearly influenced the design of the plat as a garden suburb, with a curvilinear layout of streets and an irregular division of lots. Stillhouse Cove's salt water marsh and beach were not well suited for housing construction, but they were a scenic and recreational amenity, and the tall bluffs rising above the cove were an ideal building site, elevated above the flood plain and offering extensive water views. As Orray Taft had done over half a century before, the Taft Estate Plat likewise capitalized on these unique features. The map of the plat, dated August 1904, shows the curving Narragansett Boulevard with the cove lands on its east side, consisting of broad "salt marsh land" on the north tapering to a very narrow strip on the south.

A few months after the Taft Estate Plat was recorded, in November 1904, the Rhode Island General Assembly enacted legislation to create the Metropolitan Park Commission (MPC), authorized to create a system of public parks, reservations, and parkways in eleven municipalities that lay within a 10 mile radius of the State Capitol in Providence. Within a year the MPC, in consultation with Frederick Law Olmsted, Jr., had identified a preliminary wish list of areas to be acquired as parks and public reservations, as well as connecting pathways, drives and boulevards.

The MPC cited Narragansett Boulevard as a model for a proposed parkway in Warwick on the west shore of Narragansett Bay from Pawtuxet south to Warwick Neck (later built as Narragansett Parkway). A 1906 map shows Narragansett Boulevard as part of the metropolitan park system, but that roadway has always remained in municipal ownership. Stillhouse Cove was not on the MPC's original wish list, but as a scenic natural landscape that was not well suited for building, it certainly fit the selection criteria, and in 1912 the MPC proposed to acquire Stillhouse Cove as a state reservation. The Edgewood Improvement Association heartily endorsed this proposal because it would allow the public to continue to enjoy and use Stillhouse Cove, and would also protect property values adjacent to the waterfront.⁶

As of 1912, 28 new houses had already been built in the Taft Estate Plat; five more were added over the next three years, so seventy-seven percent of the 43 contributing buildings in the historic district were standing by the time the Metropolitan Park Commission acquired Stillhouse Cove. About half of these houses, located near the east ends of Circuit Drive, Stratford Road, and Windsor Road as well as on Selkirk Road and Narragansett Boulevard itself, would have had water views, and Stillhouse Cove could be reached within a five-minute walk of any location within the plat. That proximity must have been a major selling point for the homeowners who chose to buy in the Taft Estate Plat.

The Metropolitan Park Commission acquired the Stillhouse Cove Reservation (which included about 38 acres of water and about 5 acres of land) by eminent domain in 1915 (Figure 3).⁷ The MPC Annual Report of 1916 celebrated this accomplishment as “the most notable work during the past year,” and the Providence Journal likewise endorsed this new state reservation, noting that it would “insure the protection of the lower end of the boulevard for all time against the erection of buildings of any character intended to mar the landscape.”⁸

The MPC’s acquisition of Stillhouse Cove reunited the cove lands that had been divided by the Aberdeen Plat of 1901 and the Taft Estate Plat of 1904.

The Metropolitan Park Commission had chronic problems with a lack of funding, and dissolved in 1935. Oversight of the metropolitan (later, state) park system passed to several successive state agencies.⁹ About 20 acres of the Reservation, all under water, was sold to the R.I. Yacht Club in 1955. In 1978 a group of concerned neighbors formed the Edgewood Waterfront Preservation Association to address over a decade of neglect in the cove lands, organizing clean-ups and working with various government agencies to restore the marsh and the beach. The City of Cranston acquired the Stillhouse Cove Reservation in 1984,¹⁰ and since then has worked with the Edgewood Waterfront Preservation Association and other neighborhood groups to preserve and protect this beloved public park, which has historical roots in the original development of the Taft Estate Plat.

⁷ Deed Book 131/Page 95. This document, dated July 30, 1915, does not name the owner(s) of the cove lands at the time of condemnation, but it is referenced in the Grantor Index under the name of Stephen B. Brown, who had been the owner of all the land that was included in the Taft Estate Plat of 1904, including the southern portion of Stillhouse Cove. (Note that the condemnation legislation is also dated 1915, as is the plat map of the Stillhouse Cove condemnation. The chain of title card for Assessor’s Plat 2-2, Lot 2174, indicates that the property was condemned by the Metropolitan Park Commission in 1916, but this is evidently an error. The acreage of the Reservation comes from an article in Providence Magazine (March 1919, p. 112), which also erroneously states that Stillhouse Cove was acquired in 1916 by a combination of condemnation and purchase. No evidence was found in Cranston deeds of the outright purchase of any portion of the cove lands in 1915, or of any land transfers in 1916.)

Verbal Boundary Description (Describe the boundaries of the property.)

This Amendment extends the eastern boundary of the existing historic district eastward across Narragansett Boulevard to include all of Lot 2174 in Assessor’s Plat 2-2.

Boundary Justification (Explain why the boundaries were selected.)

On the 1904 Taft Estate Plat map, the northern boundary is a line that extends from the rear property lines of house lots on the north side of Windsor Road, straight across Narragansett Boulevard to the Providence River/upper Narragansett Bay. This Amendment brings into the historic district an area of natural open space that was originally part of the Taft Estate and has been a public park since 1915-1916.
