Built in 1773 by Revolutionary War General James Mitchell Varmum, the Varmum House is an elegant and commodious two-story, five-bay-wide, clapboarded house with two interior brick chimneys running through a gable-on-hip roof. Resting on a foundation of coursed granite ashlar, the house is set on a steep slope above the main street of East Greenwich and faces east towards East Greenwich Cove and Narragansett Pay beyond.

The central entrance, with its panelled door and one-story portico, forms the principal decorative feature of the exterior. The portico is simply a pedimented door design pushed forward and supported by fluted Ionic pilasters and free-standing, unfluted Ionic columns on bases. All windows are twelve-over-twelve-paned, double-hung sash, with heavy molded sills and (on the first floor) projecting capping cornices-except for the stairway-landing window at the rear whose top is segmentally-arched and which has twenty-light sashes. The elaborate, modilioned main cornice is not broken-out above the plainly-enframed windows of the second story.

Like its exterior, the interior of the Varnum House is very similar in design and plan to the Eldredge house at Peirce and Division Streets, the other large mansion of the 1770's in East Greenwich. The two interior chimneys each provide fireplaces for two rooms on either side of the central hall on both floors. At the back of the central hall, with its panelled wainscot and old French wallpaper, the stairway rises in three runs. The turned newels and the balusters, set three to a stair, support a ramped rail which has a curved termination on the first floor. Panelled wainscoting, dentil cornices (broken-out above openings in the walls), panelled shutters, and mantelpieces surmounted by simple shelves and panelling to the ceiling decorate the first-floor rooms. The particularly beautiful dining-room fireplace, with its broken-pediment overmantel, was copied by Stanford White for a building at the Jamestown Exposition of 1907. The kitchen, with its six-footwide fireplace and plain, unpainted panelling, is expectedly less refined than the other rooms of the main floor. Rooms on the second floor, with simple chair-rails and fireplaces without overmantel treatment, are also less elaborate. Much of the original hardware throughout the house and some of its original wide-board floors have been preserved.

Alterations have not been extensive. Two lateral bay windows have been extended from the rear rooms of the first story, and a two-story ell of sympathetic style was added, before 1900, to the rear. This ell is currently used as a nuseum of Varnum and local memorabilia. A spacious walled garden is still maintained.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Varnum House is an exceptionally handsome and well-maintained example of a type of elegant, large-scale dwelling built in Rhode Island just prior to the Revolution. Like the nearby and contemporary Eldredge house, it is of refined but not elaborate design.

The house is noted, of course, for its connection with General James Mitchell Varnum. As a prospering young lawyer, Varnum built his house in 1773. He was appointed first commander of the Kentish Guards in East Greenwich in 1774, and in 1775 he led that company, including Nathanael Greene, to war. He served with distinction at the siege of Boston and in the battles of Rhode Island, White Plains, Long Island, Red Bank, and Valley Forge. During the Revolution, Generals Washington, Lafayette, and Sullivan were entertained at Varnum's house. Lafayette is believed to have stayed in the south-east chamber of the house on his visits to East Greenwich.

Following the war, Varnum returned to his law practice and was elected to Congress in 1780 and again in 1786. He made his place in legal history in the case of Trevett vs. Weeden (1786), the first well-authenticated American case in which an act of a legislative body, in this instance the Rhode Island General Assembly, was declared unconstitutional.

When the Northwest Territory was established in 1787, Varnum was appointed its District Judge. Leaving his wife behind, he arrived at Marietta (now in Ohio), the established seat of government for the region, in 1788, only to die there the following year.

Subsequent owners of the house have included Ethan Clarke, Revolutionary War officer and first president of the Rhode Island Central Eank, Chief Justice George A. Brayton of the Rhode Island Supreme Court, and Dr. William Shaw Bowen, noted physician and journalist. The house was purchased in 1939 by the Varnum Continentals for use as a museum and has been sympathetically restored.
