As originally built, the Theazer Arnold Rouse had a diapboarded front wall two stories high raphigh peaked front wall two stories high raphigh peaked front walls and kitchen combined to form a stone and wall of great width and height. The chimney top, built in a cross form with applied pllasters suggests buick Jacobean stacks and is one of the most elaborate in New England. They diamond paped casement windows lighted the main section of the house but larger sash windows are used in the lean-to section.

The fireplace is the living-hall is 10 feet, 8 inches wide and 5 feet, I unches high. Its glass osk mantel tree is over 12 feet long and regarder with the heavy calling timbers illustrates the massive construction of a seventeenth cautury house.

In the eighteenth century the original structure was enlarged by raising the root over the year to two full stories. A two-room deep, two-story frame section with a separate chimney at the east and and a one-story lean-to across the rear work also added. This is the section with the cash windows which had done into use by this time. The original high peaked front gable was also removed during this period.

During the reconstruction the rotted wood of the sills, the south and east walls, claphoards, studs, windows, doors, and some framing timbers had to be removed along with later fill in the hall fireplace. Most of the original frame was left as well as the chimney masonry, eightmenth-century brick chimney stack, and the second story addition of the eightmenth-century with its windows.

New floorboards were added along with the second floor sheathing. Outside boarding was placed diagonally to give stability to the leaning stone and while moderne wilding proof was added to preventwet rot. Old hand wrought bails were used for the new clapboards and casement windows. A new staircase was also constructed in the southeast corner following the original holes in the masonry. The wide off center gable, although clearly indicated by the original beams in the attic, was emitted.

BOUMDARY

Located on a small plot of ground on State Route 123 near its junction with State Route 126, the boundary is drawn to include only the Eleazer Arnold House, beginning at the southeast corner where the posts between the lot on the east and the Arnold property meet Route 123, then west along Boute 123 to the hedges and posts which wark the western boundary then north along these bedges to a point in line with the house to the northwest, then following along the wall of this house, first east and then north to the end of the wall, then continuing east along a row of posts until they intersect the A RUCT

The Eleazer Arnold House, Lincoln Rhode Island was built in 1687 and survives today as a fine example of a stone-ender house. Rhode Island, unlike Massachusetts and Connecticut, had a plentiful supply of building stone and lime for mortar. This resulted in a local form of domestic structure termed a "stone-ender", created from the method of enlargement. Starting with a one-room house with an end fireplace, the first addition was commonly a rear lean-to instead of another room at the opposite side of the chimney. Its fireplace was built beside that of the hall, and the combined chimneys of the two were so wide that they virtually covered the whole end of the house. The Arnold House is one of the finest existing examples of such a stone ender.

The house remained in the possession of the Arnold family until it was acquired by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. In has undergone restoration and is opened as a house museum.

Name: Eleazer Arnold House Great Road Lincoln, RI

DESCRIPTION:

As originally build, the Eleazer Arnold House had a clapboarded front wall two stories high, a high peaked front gable, and a long rear roof over the kitchen lean-to. The chimneys of the hall and kitchen combined to form a stone end wall of great width and height. The chimney top, built in a cross form with applied pilasters suggests brick Jacobean stacks and is one of the most elaborate in New England. Tiny diamond paned casement windows lighted the main section of the house but larger sash windows are used in the lean-to section.

The fireplace in the living-hall is 10 feet, 8 inches wide and 5 feet, 3 inches high. Its great oak mantel tree is over 12 feet long and together with the heavy ceiling timbers illustrates the massive construction of a seventeenth-century house.

In the eighteenth century the original structure was enlarged by raising the roof over the rear to two full stories. A two-room deep, two-story frame section with a separate chimney at the east end and a one-story lean-to across the rear were also added. This is the section with the sash windows which had come into use by this time. The original high peaked front gable was also removed during this period.

During the reconstruction the rotted wood of the sills, the south and east walls, clapboards, studs, windows, doors, and some framing timbers had to be removed along with later fill in the hall fireplace. Most of the original frame was left as well as the chimney masonry, eighteenth-century brick chimney stack, and the second-story addition of the eighteenth-century with its windows.

New floorboards were added along with the second floor sheathing. Outside boarding was placed diagonally to give stability to the leaning stone end while modern building paper was added to prevent wet rot. Old hand wrought nails were used for the new clapboards and casement windows. A new staircase was also constructed in the southeast corner following the original holes in the masonry. The wide off-center gable, although clearly indicated by the original beams in the attic, was omitted.

SIGNIFICANCE

The Eleazer Arnold House, Lincoln, Rhode Island, was built in 1687 and survives today as a fine example of a stone-ender house. Rhode Island, unlike Massachusetts and Connecticut, had a plentiful supply of building stone and lime for mortar. This resulted in a local form of domestic structure termed a "stoneender", created from the method of enlargement. Starting with a one-room house with an end fireplace, the first addition was commonly a rear lean-to instead of another room at the opposite side of the chimney. Its fireplace was built beside that of the hall, and the combined chimneys of the two were so wide that they virtually covered the whole end of the house. The Arnold House is one of the finest existing examples of such a stone ender.

The house remained in the possession of the Arnold family until it was acquired by the Society for the Preservation of New England Antiquities. It has undergone restoration and is opened as a house museum.

BOUNDARY

Located on a small plot of ground on State Route 123 near its junction with State Route 126, the boundary is drawn to include only the Eleazer Arnold House, beginning at the southeast corner where the posts between the lot on the east and the Arnold property meet Route 123, then west along Route 123 to the hedges and posts which mark the western boundary then north along these hedges to a point in line with the house to the northwest, then following along the wall of this house, first east and then north to the end of the wall, then continuing east along a row of posts until they intersect the posts of the eastern boundary at the northeast corner, then south along these posts to the point of beginning, as shown on the sketch map.

The Eleazor Arnold House, erected in 1687, is an excellent example of a stone-ender house of medieval design, enlarged in a way that was muchutilized in Rhode Island. It is also that State's best preserved example of a 17th century house.

Rhode Island, unlike Massachusetts and Connecticut, had a plentiful supply of building stone and lime for mortaring it. Consequently, a common local form was the 'stone-ender' house. This arose from a characteristic Rhode Island method of enlargement. Starting with a one-room house, with fireplace at the end, the first addition was commonly a rear lean-to instead of another room at the opposite side of the chimney. The lean-to room served as a kitchen. Its fireplace was built beside that of the hall, and the combined chimneys of the two were so wide that they covered virtually the whole end of the house.

The Arnold House is the finest existing example of such a stoneender. As originally built, it had a clapboarded front wall two stories high, a high-peaked front gable, and a long rear roof over the kitchen lean-to. The chimneys of the hall and kitchen combine to form a stone end wall of imposing breadth and height. The chimney top, shaped by many pilasters, is one of the most claborate in New England. The fireplace in the hall is one of the largest, 10 feet 8 inches wide, 5 feet 3 inches high, and 3 feet 10 inches deep. Its great oak mantel tree is over 12 feet long and together with the heavy ceiling timbers well illustrates the massive construction of a 17th century house. In the 18th century the original structure was enlarged by raising the roof over the rear to two full stories, and also by the additions of a two-room-deep, two-story frame section with
