The White Horse Tavern is a large-scale, five-bay-wide, two-and-one-half story clapboarded building capped by a gambrel roof. It is set on a stone foundation, abutting the sidewalk at the corner of Farewell and Marlborough Streets, and faces east. Probably built before 1673 as only a two-room, two-story house with a large pilastered brick chimney, it was expanded across the rear to its present five-room plan before 1750, when it probably also received its present roof—form. The building was further altered after the Revolution.

The centered main entrance on Farewell Street and the side entrance on Marlborough Street are similar in design. Each has a sixpanel door surmounted by a transom and enframed by flat pilasters which support an entablature and pediment. The 18th-century windows were altered in the restoration of the 1950's; they now have twelve-overeight double-hung sash with molded sills and caps. No evidence of the seventeenth-century windows and their proportions has remained. (As presently restored, the size and the shape of the windows have been changed from the narrow nine-over-nine dimensions common to early eighteenth-century Rhode Island building and belong to no style appropriate to this building.) A two-story shingled ell, "salt-box" in form, adjoins the rear at the north-west corner.

Much of the seventeenth-century character os the interior is still intact in the original eastern half of the building. Most of the heavy timber framing throughout this two-room, two-story section is exposed. revealing chamfered summer-beams and girts; and chamfering was applied to the corner-posts in the south-east room on the second floor. Although now encased by panelling, diagonal bracing in the north-west room of the second floor remains in place. The summer-beams in the north-east room on the first floor and in the south-east chamber on the second floor run perpendicular to the fireplace; those in the south-east room and in the north-east chamber run parallel to the fireplace.

Although its exposed pilastered top is a restoration, the original central chimney remains in place, as do brick fireplaces of very large dimensions in each room. The curved walls and coves above are characteristic of early brick fireplace construction in Rhode Island: those in this building are especially good examples. The triple-run winding staircase butted against the chimney in the cramped front hall is a replacement, installed in the 1950's. It is designed with sawn, S-shaped balusters and a closed, panelled string-course.

Opening into the rear of the original south-eastern rooms, a triple-run winding staircase with turned balusters and a panelled string-course; this is an original stair probably dating from the pre-1750 enlargment of the house. The rear rooms added at that time have been altered to accommodate modern restaurant facilities.

7. Description.

In the 1950's restoration, however, an unfortunate mistake was made in the treatment of the window openings and their sash, changing the size and shape from the narrower 9-over-9 proportions common to early eighteenth-century Rhode Island building. Early photographs show windows of the correct form (which had, of course, in their turn replaced the seventeenth-century windows).

Probably built before 1673, the White Horse Tavern is the oldest tavern still in operation in America. Acquired in 1673 by William Mayes, a famous local pirate, it first served as a private residence, but soon became an inn. Mayes himself had been granted a liquor license as early as 1687. The house came afterwards into the Nichols family by marriage, and the sign of the White Horse was first hung by Jonathan Nichols, who owned the tavern in 1730.

The tavern served as a center of local affairs throughout the early years of Newport. The Town Council met here, as did the colony's General Assembly -- according to tradition -- while Richard Munday's Colony House (1739) was under construction. So important was the tavern's role in public affairs that it was thought that perhaps the Colony House should be built facing it.

The White Horse Tavern is of great architectural significance. Although it was enlarged to its present dimensions in the mid-eighteenth century, its original esction is one of the earliest structures preserved in the state. The early interior character of this building has been restored and is well maintained, and the structure still serves the public as a tavern. " "
