7. Description.

retaining wall that runs along the west and south sides of the lot was once crested by sanded and painted cast-iron balusters and a brownstone rail. An iron gate remains at the sidewalk entrance on Benefit Street, but the larger one in the John Street driveway piers has been lost. The grounds are informally planted with shrubs, and today unkempt.

The Hoppin house is laid out about a central hallway running northsouth; the south end is a large vestibule for the main entrance. half of the house west of the hall is divided into three large (drawingand dining-) rooms; the east half into a large room at the (south) front, a stair hall and east entrance hall at the center, and a smaller room and corridor leading to the kitchen at the rear (north). A door from the small room gives access to a service stair. (The second floor of the house has eight rooms in an arrangement like that of the first floor, around a long central hall; and the third floor is similarly laid out. Many rooms on the second and third floors have now been dsubdivided for office use.) The stair hall on the first floor is separated from the central hallway by an open triple arcade corresponding to the east and west exterior arcdae treatment; this decorative feature is repeated by blind arcading on the west wall of the hall. The stairway is U-shaped around an open well, with two landings between floors; it has a closed panelled string, panelled soffits, heavy angular newels between which turned balusters support a molded, ramped handrail; the whole is stained a dark oak color. The floor of the vestibule is covered with black and white marble tile; the wide pine boards flooring the first and second stories were intended always to be covered by carpeting; and the third story now is floored with asphalt tile.

Walls on the first floor display elaborate plaster and wooden panelling. The two front rooms at the southeast and southwest corners have oak-panelled wainscoting, plaster ceilings laid off in panels, and (in the southeast room) an entablature with a Doric frieze. The ceiling in the southwest room is grained to look like wood. The plaster ceiling in the vestibule has one large recessed panel, heavily molded, with quadrants taken out of the corners. The two other principal rooms on the first floor have plaster walls and ceilings with elaborate trim, and the ceiling above the stairwell has a deeply-recessed oval panel. Doors on the first floor--some of which are sliding--have heavily-molded surrounds and panels (some later glass doors have been installed in the hall). The upper floors have plaster walls with molded, mitered architraves on doors (many of which have been removed) and windows, and generally simpler trim. Windows are recessed in the thick walls and have panelled reveals, folding shutters. Corner rooms on all floors have fireplaces, many with heavy, decorated iron hearth surrounds or with markle mantels typical of the 1850's. The mantelpiece in the southwest room of the first floor, however, is of deeply-carved oak, with twisted columns and a great lion mask; it has a pink marble facing and a black marble hearth. The west middle room on the first floor is notable for its decoration. The walls have panels of raised plaster molding with rococo leaf detail at the tops and bottoms above a chair-rail and panelled wainscoting, and there are carvings over the doors. The ceiling has a center medallion from which a crystal chandelier is hung, and it is bordered by a molded plaster cornice with eggand-dart and guilloche ornament. The mirror over the richly-carved white marble fireplace is part of the original scheme of decoration.

only cultivated but also an heiress; together they made their large residence a center of artistic and social life in the city: due to their lavish style of entertaining it became known as "the house of a thousand candles." After Mr. Hoppin's death in 1873, his widow remarried, and the house was sometimes let, among its occupants being Governor George P. Wetmore, who in winters in the state capital needed magnificence equal to what he had during summers at Château-sur-Mer in Newport. In 1877, the house was taken over by the then Governor, Ambrose Burnside, on the occasion of a visit by President Rutherford B. Hayes, who was given a great fête at the Hoppin house, with ornamental illuminations outdoors.

In 1920 the house passed from ownership of the Hoppin heirs. Today the building houses two businesses whose needs have considerably altered the interior. The exterior is being allowed to deteriorate badly although it retains, as of now, most of its visual integrity. The grounds are poorly kept, and the retaining wall has lost all of its balustrade.

The Hoppin house is one of the great mansions on Benefit Street, an important part of the fabric of the Historic District in which it stands, and by itself deserves also this separate nomination to the National Register.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Thomas F. Hoppin house is one of the largest and most elegant houses built in Providence during the mid-nineteenth century and is a handsome example of the interest during this period in formal English urban architecture, particularly that of Sir Charles Barry. The house is similar to contemporary London mansions in St. James's and in Kensington Palace Gardens, whose style is also reflected in Thomas A. Tefft's Tully D. Bowen house, just to the south, of a year or two earlier. Being in such close proximity, the two houses form an instructive pair; having a long, impressive façade on Benefit Street, the Hoppin house proclaims itself more grandly than does the Bowen house (a discreet Florentine palazzo). The Hoppin house, built about 1853, is also significant because it preceded Henry Childs's Henry Lippitt house (1863) on Hope Street, and Richard Upjohn's Marshall Woods house (186h) on Prospect Street -- both of which represent a move away from the academically Italianate forms seen in the Hoppin house to a more stylized, Victorian mode during the 1860's. The interior of the Hoppin house displays an eclectic use of materials and decoration. The stillregular formal plan and massive staircase, the plaster moldings and marble fireplaces are among its most notable features.

Alpheus C. Morse (1818-1893), was the architect of this imposing dwelling, his first commission in Providence. Born in Massachusetts, he apprenticed as a draftsman in the Boston office of Alexander Parris in the 1830's and by 1842 was travelling in Europe, no doubt with an influence upon his future architecture; the buildings by Thomas Tefft which he could see in Providence and other places upon his return must surely have been another influence. After executing the Hoppin house, Morse remained the rest of his life in Providence, where he enjoyed a prosperous practice, designing numerous prominent buildings and important residences. He became the first president of the Rhode Island chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

On the site of the Hoppin house had first stood John Innes Clark's "mansion house," a close duplicate of the Joseph Nightingale house still nearby on Benefit Street. A fire razed the Clark house in 1849 during the occupancy of William Jenkins, whose daughter Anna subsequently married Thomas F. Hoppin and commenced by 1853 the present building. Thomas Hoppin was very cultivated and Anna Hoppin was not
