STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SIGNIFICANCE

A remarkably well preserved example of a mid-19th century revival style, this Italian villa is the most elaborate of a grouping of mansions constructed by rich Providence merchants. The Lippitt house is the best preserved example in the East Side district and was built by the distinguished Henry Lippitt, at one time Governor of Rhode Island. Elaborately furnished, retaining most of its original appointments, the house is an outstanding example of its period and style.

The Italian Villa or Italianate style was another imported architectural fashion like the Greek and Gothic and part of what Fiske Kimball called "America's yearning for the picturesque." This irregular, coarsely detailed style flourished in mid century and was favored by architects such as Notman (1810-1865), Alexander Jackson Davis (1803-1892) and especially Henry Austin (1804-1991). The first published examples of this free Tuscan vernacular in America were in Downing's books (1841). Remarkably free in design, these houses are usually dominated by a high tower, irregular window placement, rectangular plans usually with grand interior stairs. Downing himself described Italian Villas as "pleasing to discriminating persons because it is highly irregular, with great picturesqueness and variety."

According to John Maass the Italianate Villa was by far the most influential house type developed during the Victorian era. Almost all later detached American houses have adopted some of its features. The villa was "designed from the inside out" as symmetry was not desired, the rooms could be scaled and grouped by function. The effect was said to be "elegant variety" and the message of the villa was clearly: "This is the rich but not gaudy home of a gentlemen of taste and culture."

Henry Lippitt was born in Providence in 1818 and made a fortune in textile manufacturing, as President of the Lippitt Woolen Company. He was active in civic affairs, particularly the Opera House Association. Lippitt was governor of Rhode Island in 1875 and 1876 represented the state at the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia.

This house is somewhat restrained compared to other villas, perhaps because its builder, architect Henry Childs, was somewhat conservative. Compared to the sober exterior, the interior is lavish and colorful. The decoration is magnificent, employing many varieties of wood, many types of marble, important chandeliers and specially designed hardware, painting and graining of walls and ceilings, stencilling

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

A large brick house with a three-bay west front of 60 feet by a main block of 75 feet with a projecting center bay on front and semicircular bay on the south side. There is a large two story wing on the east. The foundations are regular ashlar brownstone with wall construction of brick with brownstone quoins on the first floor which continue as slightly projecting brick pilasters on upper two floors, which meet similar brick entablature under cornice, enframing walls. There are double brownstone belt courses between first and second floors with balusters under the windows simulating balconies.

The semicircular entrance porch has Corinthian columns, fluted and cabled; entablature with balustrade, modillion cornice, and carved frieze. Portecochere on north side with paneled square columns, paneled entablature, cornice similar to roof cornice, but with balustrade.

The roof is hipped except for a projecting center bay on the west front, the doors are paneled double doors with paneled jambs and transom light above. The windows are four over four light double hung Windows. Molded brownstone frames, sills on brackets, cornices on first and second floors, segmental heads on third floor. There are tri-partite windows on second floor over main entrance porch, brownstone trim with Corinthian columns and pilasters, frieze similar to porch below, pediment over central window.

Floor plans: L-shape central hall leading west to front door and north to porte-cochere--stairway in north leg of the hallway. Three rooms on south side, reception room, library with curved bay, dining room--all open to hall and connected by double doors. Large drawing room on northwest, billiard room at northeast, kitchen in rear wing. Central hall 11' 4" wide, first floor ceiling 13' high. Bedrooms on upper floors.

Stairways: U-shape with landings, 54' wide, 13' treads, 6-1/2" risers, closed string, heavy railing with molded rail, turned balusters, carved and paneled newels.

There are patterned hardwood floors, elaborate paneled wainscoting in most rooms and highly decorated painted plaster walls. The original gas fixtures are intact, converted to electricity.

The original carpenters' contract exists--Mrs. Antoinette Downing has transcribed the following:

Lumber Contract

Framing lumber--spruce, pine, hemlock, chestnut. Finish lumber--clear pine, hard pine, oak, cherry, curled maple, black walnut, ash, rock maple, butternut.

gilding, etc.--all either in perfect state or else undergoing careful restoration. Furniture and ornaments are all in period and most are part of the original furnishings. The owners intend this house to be a house museum, and there is probably no other house of this period in Rhode Island of its size, quality and state of preservation.

7. Description.

The drawing room does not. however, retain its original wall decoration, for in 1910 it was given panelling defined by plaster moldings and hung with damask; it does contain its original white marble Louis-XVI-style mantel. The smoking room (originally the billiard room) appears somber because of its small window area and dark simulated wood panels (of plaster with painted graining) outlined with real wood moldings. The library, which extends into the curved south bay, has stencilled walls, a compartmented and stencilled ceiling. and, between the windows of the bay, a fireplace treatment comprising a wood and marble mantel with a large surmounting mirror in a carved enframement. Etched glass doors lead to the dining room, where carved wainscoting runs along the wall, and there is a patterned frieze below the cornice. The reception room is perhaps plainer than the other rooms, but has a compartmented ceiling and a small arched marble fire-The walls display their original stencilled border place. The rather sumptuous materials in the house include designs. woods such as oak, curly maple, ash, black walnut; and marbles for the mantels such as rose Pyrénées, black, veined Lisbon, pink, and Carrara. The bedrooms upstairs are more plainly but no less carefully handled. Many of their ceilings have painted designs.

8. Significance

Internally this house is distinguished by its magnificent and intact decoration, in which are employed many woods, many types of marble, important chandeliers and specially designed hardware, painting and graining of walls and ceilings, stencilling, gilding, etc.--all either in perfect state or else undergoing careful restoration. Furniture and ornaments are all in period and most are part of the original furnishings. The owners intend this house to be a house museum, and there is probably no other house of this period in New England of its size, quality and state of preservation.

The imposing, brick-faced Italianate house of three stories built c. 1862-1865 by Henry Lippitt stands on a prominent, embanked corner lot in Providence's residential East Side. Under its hipped roof, it is a near-cube of palazzo style, though it has a rounded bay on its south elevation, a semielliptical one with porte-cochère on its north one, and a service wing extending well to the east. Its principal façade is the west one, which has a slightly projecting, pedimented central "pavilion" incorporating the main entrance.

HYSICAL APPEARANCE

The first floor rises upon an ashlar brownstone basement and is defined by quoins and terminated by double belt courses separating it from the story above; its windows are aedicular and emphasize the verticality of the house. The second floor has windows less elaborately enframed but with balusters, in imitation of balconies, below them -- continuing a vertical emphasis. The smaller windows of the third story have segmental heads. Quoining does not rise above the first story; walls above contain panels between corner piers.

Principal features of the west façade are the semi-elliptical entrance porch with tall, fluted Corinthian columns supporting an entablature with an elaborate foliate frieze and surmounting balustrade, behind which is a pedimented, tripartite window of aedicular form at second-floor level. A dominant feature of the north elevation is the commodious porte-cochère, balustraded, and supported on robust panelled piers. Crowning and surrounding the house is a vigorous and projecting entablature with dentils and modillions.

The smooth, salmon-colored brick wall surfaces contrast with the somber, dark-brown-painted porches and trim, creating a striking effect. Bracketted ombrae, side (south) porches and some cast-iron adornments are additionally picturesque. The site is contained by a brownstone retaining wall with piers, between which originally ran a cast-iron fence of geometrical pattern. A curving driveway runs under the porte-cochère.

The interior of the main floor is of an L-plan -- a variation on the traditional symmetrical central-hall plan -- with the large hall opening on both the north (porte-cochère) and the west. The staircase is not visible from the formal main entrance on the west but is found in the hall's short arm leading to the porte-cochère. The principal rooms open along the length of the hall, whose great openness is emphasized by two heavy metal chandeliers. Like the rooms opening from it, the hall is finished with elaborate wood wainscoting and stencilled plaster walls.

The Governor Henry Lippitt House is one of the most important mid-19th century buildings in Providence. As an example of an Italianate palazzo, it recalls the style that Sir Charles Barry popularized in England, as well as some of Thomas A. Tefft's buildings of the 1850's. Anita Glass says the rounded projection on the side of the Lippitt House looks back to the [Thomas Poynton] Ives House of 1806 and also was used by Upjohn in the Marshall Woods mansion, which was built at the same time. Another reminder of the Ives House is the Palladian window element [on the west side]...

The Lippitt House is especially interesting, however, because it represents a first move away from prescribed forms to a more eclectic, Victorian mode, and because of the great taste and imagination that Henry Childs used in his design. Coming later than the other more rigidly academic Italianate houses -- the Marshall Woods, Thomas Hoppin, and Tully Bowen Houses of the 1850's -- the Henry Lippitt House outdoes them visually through a restrained and intelligent elaboration on the style.

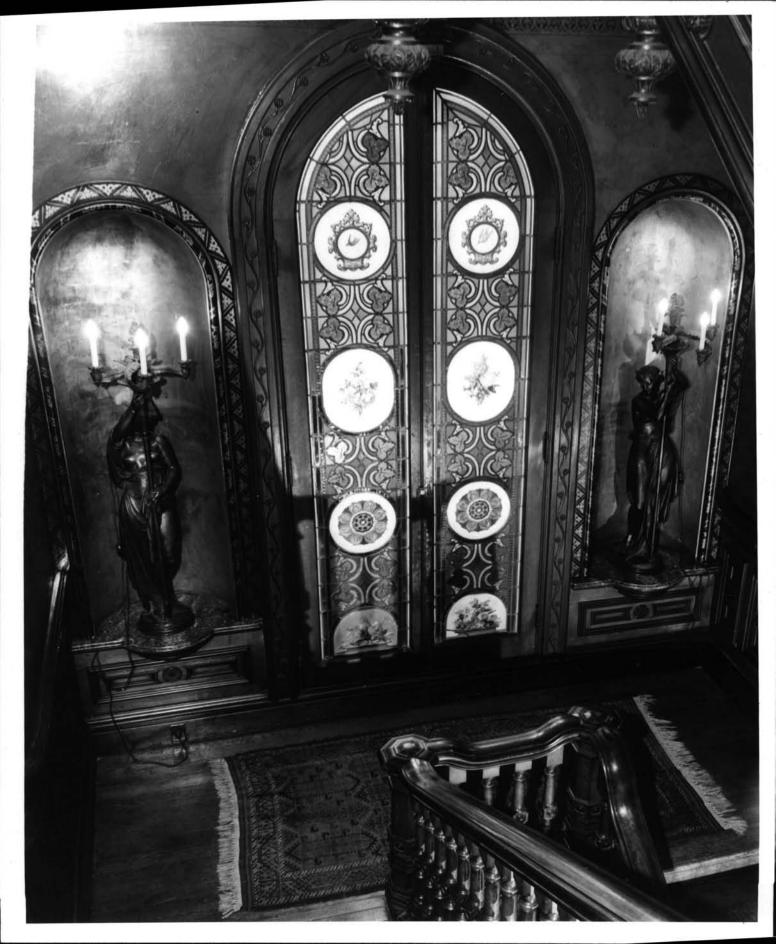

Childs was known as a builder rather than as an architect, and it is unresolved whether he is responsible for the conception of the house or for only the working drawings. In any case he must have has an extensive knowledge of the architectural works of his time.

The house provides a point of focus for an entire East Side district in Providence, both visually and historically. On the corner of two main thoroughfares, this house is the conspicuous symbol of an area of old mansions stretching for some blocks to its north and south. As a reminder of Rhode Island's past as well as an extremely striking example of domestic Italianate architecture, the Henry Lippitt House deserves continued attention.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

SIGNIFICANCE

A remarkably well preserved example of a mid-19th century revival style, this Italian villa is the most elaborate of a grouping of mansions constructed by rich Providence merchants. The Lippitt house is the best preserved example in the East Side district and was built by the distinguished Henry Lippitt, at one time Governor of Rhode Island. Elaborately furnished, retaining most of its original appointments, the house is an outstanding example of its period and style.

The Italian Villa or Italianate style was another imported architectural fashion like the Greek and Gothic and part of what Fiske Kimball called "America's yearning for the picturesque." This irregular, coarsely detailed style flourished in mid century and was favored by architects such as Notman (1810-1865), Alexander Jackson Davis (1803-1892) and especially Henry Austin (1804-1891). The first published examples of this free Tuscan vernacular in America were in Downing's books (1841). Remarkably free in design, these houses are usually dominated by a high tower, irregular window placement, rectangular plans usually with grand interior stairs. Downing himself described Italian Villas as "pleasing to discriminating persons because it is highly irregular, with great picturesqueness and variety."

According to John Maass the Italianate Villa was by far the most influential house type developed during the Victorian era. Almost all later detached American houses have adopted some of its features. The villa was "designed from the inside out" as symmetry was not desired, the rooms could be scaled and grouped by function. The effect was said to be "elegant variety" and the message of the villa was clearly: "This is the rich but not gaudy home of a gentlemen of taste and culture."

Henry Lippitt was born in Providence in 1818 and made a fortune in textile manufacturing, as President of the Lippitt Woolen Company. He was active in civic affairs, particularly the Opera House Association. Lippitt was governor of Rhode Island in 1875 and 1876 represented the state at the Centennial Exhibition in Philadelphia.

This house is somewhat restrained compared to other villas, perhaps because its builder, architect Henry Childs, was somewhat conservative. Compared to the sober exterior, the interior is lavish and colorful. The decoration is magnificent, employing many varieties of wood, many types of marble, important chandeliers and specially designed hardware, painting and graining of walls and ceilings, stencilling Form-No 10-300a (Rev 10-74)

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

A large brick house with a three-bay west front of 60 feet by a main block of 75 feet with a projecting center bay on front and semicircular bay on the south side. There is a large two story wing on the east. The foundations are regular ashlar brownstone with wall construction of brick with brownstone quoins on the first floor which continue as slightly projecting brick pilasters on upper two floors, which meet similar brick entablature under cornice, enframing walls. There are double brownstone belt courses between first and second floors with balusters under the windows simulating balconies.

The semicircular entrance porch has Corinthian columns, fluted and cabled; entablature with balustrade, modillion cornice, and carved frieze. Portecochere on north side with paneled square columns, paneled entablature, cornice similar to roof cornice, but with balustrade.

The roof is hipped except for a projecting center bay on the west front, the doors are paneled double doors with paneled jambs and transom light above. The windows are four over four light double hung windows. Molded brownstone frames, sills on brackets, cornices on first and second floors, segmental heads on third floor. There are tri-partite windows on second floor over main entrance porch, brownstone trim with Corinthian columns and pilasters, frieze similar to porch below, pediment over central window.

Floor plans: L-shape central hall leading west to front door and north to porte-cochere--stairway in north leg of the hallway. Three rooms on south side, reception room, library with curved bay, dining room--all open to hall and connected by double doors. Large drawing room on northwest, billiard room at northeast, kitchen in rear wing. Central hall 11' 4" wide, first floor ceiling 13' high. Bedrooms on upper floors.

Stairways: U-shape with landings, 54' wide, 13' treads, 6-1/2" risers, closed string, heavy railing with molded rail, turned balusters, carved and paneled newels.

There are patterned hardwood floors, elaborate paneled wainscoting in most rooms and highly decorated painted plaster walls. The original gas fixtures are intact, converted to electricity.

The original carpenters' contract exists--Mrs. Antoinette Downing has transcribed the following:

Lumber Contract

Framing lumber--spruce, pine, hemlock, chestnut. Finish lumber--clear pine, hard pine, oak, cherry, curled maple, black walnut, ash, rock maple, butternut.
